THE CHIMES OF ENGLAND

The chimes, the chimes of Motherland,
Of England, green and fair,
The sweetest sound that ever fell
On a human ear,
And which has made us all
As one in love and prayer,
At night and day,
For country and for king.

These chimes that tell a thousand tales,
Of our forefathers' deeds and ways,
And ring a thousand memories
Of our forefathers' joys and pains,
At night and day,
For country and for king.

These chimes, those chimes of Motherland,
Of England, green and fair,

The Pull Mail has the following interesting letter from one of the Abyssinian captives on the last days of King Theodore.

CAMP BARBA, DALATTA, April 19, 1868.
On the evening of Tuesday, the 19th of April, we received an intimation that we were to descend the mountain the following morning in order to have an interview with the King. We immediately concluded that we were not to return, and our apprehensions were not lessened when we learned that all the native prisoners, some 600 in number, were also summoned below. At daybreak Mr. Plaid came to us accompanied by Bitterdash Hassan, the new Chief of the Ambs, and were directed to dress ourselves quickly and make our way down.

We were passing out of the compound, and were told to proceed in haste. We had not gone far when we were met by a man who told us that the King was waiting for us at the foot of the mountain.

The chimes of England, how they peal
From tower and Gothic spire, When from the distant shore
The chimes of England peal,
And ring a thousand memories
Of our forefathers' joys and pains,
At night and day,
For country and for king.

And then, those Easter bells, in Spring,
Those glorious Easter bells,
Which ring a thousand memories
Of our forefathers' joys and pains,
At night and day,
For country and for king.

And then, those Easter bells, in Spring,
Those glorious Easter bells,

AGAINST CANADA.
PROBABLE POINTS OF ATTACK.

The following correspondence of the Chicago Tribune, dated at New York on the 18th inst., gives an idea of what the American newspapers think will be the program adopted by the Fenians in the threatened invasion. The correspondence is interesting in another point of view, showing as it does, that the strength and loyalty of the Fenians is not to be underestimated.

There is certainly a widely extended belief in the course of action by the Fenians in this State. One brigade at least will go from this city consisting of the first, second, and third regiments, numbering about 2,000 men. In view of this, some information as to the intended theatre of operations, and how far of interest to our at St. John's on the Richelieu River, there being about 2,000 men. It is the most im-
